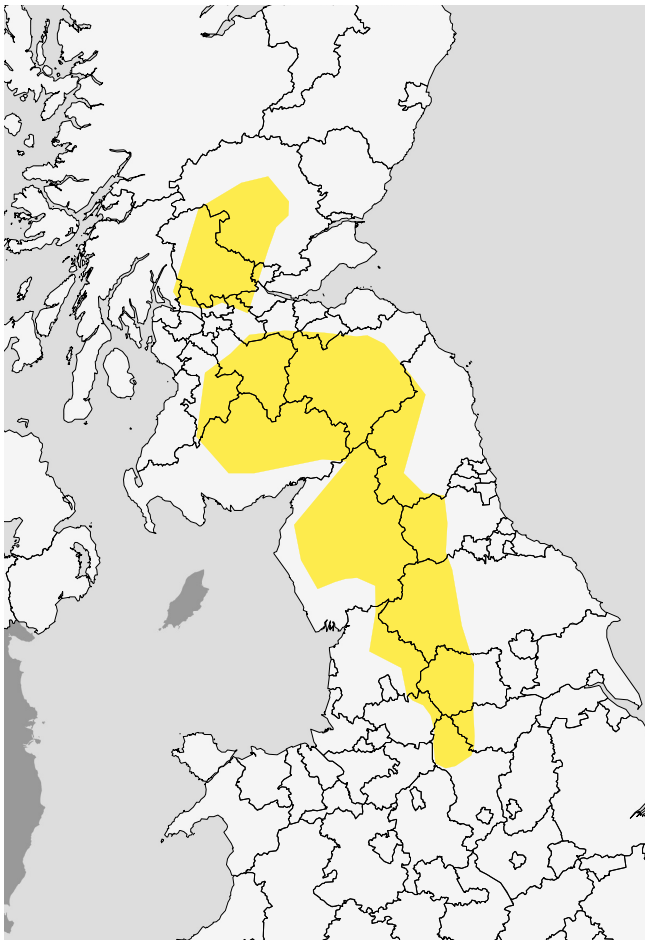
Yellow warning
Snow

Between
00:15 Sun 26 Dec 2021 and
12:00 Sun 26 Dec 2021



Snow and strong winds are expected, leading to possible disruption, mainly to travel over higher ground.

What to expect

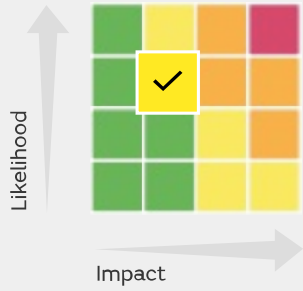
- Some roads and railways likely to be affected by snow or ice, leading to longer journey times by car, as well as by bus and possibly train services
- Some short term loss of power and other services is possible

Further details

As an area of rain moves northwards, it looks like turning to snow over parts of Northern England, and then southern and central Scotland.

Accumulations of 2-4 cm of snow are possible above 200 metres and 5-10 cm above 300 metres.

Coupled with strong winds, gusting to 35 to 45 mph in places, this is likely to lead to some difficult travel conditions across higher Pennine and Cumbrian routes, as well as the Southern Uplands, during the early hours of Sunday.



Medium likelihood of low impacts

Yellow warning
Snow

Between
00:15 Sun 26 Dec 2021 and
12:00 Sun 26 Dec 2021

Further Details (continued)

Temporary blizzard conditions may be encountered above around 300 or 400 metres elevation. These conditions will probably move into some hillier central parts of Scotland during Sunday morning, while snow turns back to rain further south.

Reason for update

Greater potential for snow accumulating over the southern Pennines in the overnight period, so warning area extended further south into Derbyshire, as well as a little further east over Durham and Northumberland.
